

SJSU Department of Anthropology

Major Policies for the Anthropology and Behavioral Science Majors

Change of Major

- The Department of Anthropology accepts continuing SJSU students into the anthropology or behavioral science majors if they have an All College GPA of 2.0 or above.
- Students who do not have an All College GPA of 2.0 or above and who wish to declare the major in anthropology must take three SJSU anthropology courses (at least two of them upper division) and receive an average GPA of 2.0; no course grade may be below 2.0. A student may attempt each course a maximum of two times.
- Students who do not have an All College GPA of 2.0 or above and who wish to declare a major in behavioral science, need to take three SJSU anthropology, psychology, or sociology courses (at least two of them upper division) and receive an average GPA of 2.0; no course grade may be below 2.0. A student may attempt each course a maximum of two times.

Probation

The criteria for probation in the anthropology, behavioral science, and organizational studies majors are those for SJSU probation at the University level.

Disqualification and Reinstatement to the Anthropology, Behavioral Science, and Organizational Studies Majors

The criteria for disqualification from the anthropology, behavioral science, and organizational majors are those for SJSU disqualification at the University level. Following a first disqualification, anthropology, behavioral science, and organizational studies majors may be reinstated only once to either major. The forms for reinstatement are available on the University's Advising Hub.
