

Nathan Anico

Student Ambassador

My name is Nathan Anico, and I am a third-year Public Health student with a Concentration in Population Data Science. What I love about Public Health is that it dissects how our physical and social environment plays a role in affecting our physiology. My other topics of interest future include dissecting the interrelated relationship between food insecurity and food waste, epigenetics, and circular economy. Other than being an HonorsX Peer Mentor, I also am a Peer Health Educator at the Student Wellness Center, a Voting Student Advocate for the Blossom@SJSU Initiative, and an Adobe Student Ambassador. Because of HonorsX, I was able to study abroad last summer where I worked with an air quality startup in Ireland, where I was able to apply many of the interdisciplinary frameworks that I was familiarized with in HonorsX to be successful and make the most out of my internship.
